Definition of state of health
The battery state of health is the available cyclable capacity at 25°C compared to the nominal capacity at beginning of life. The calculated battery state of health is based on the measured value of the battery's cyclable capacity and the expected degradation trend. The usage pattern of the battery affects the cyclable capacity.

 Disclaimer
The provided value of the battery's state of health (SOH) is based on data-driven estimates in the vehicle and the expected degradation trend. Estimations in the vehicle depend on the past usage pattern of the battery and other factors. The accuracy of the given value is expected to be within +/- 5% SOH for batteries with above 80% SOH and +/- 5% SOH deviation for batteries with less than 80% SOH. The estimated battery state of health is not a prediction or guarantee of future battery health and the battery health will degrade over time. Battery health and the rate of degradation can be affected by many factors, including but not limited to outside temperatures and charging habits. For information on managing battery health and performance, please see the owner's manual.
